GLAAD handing the awards

Stars snub Doogie Howser, Angelina's ex to be on Here! and Lindsay's lady love?

Dish has been up to her elbows in human grime this week, as she strives to purge her life of Dish-substitute and sister Prunella's pervasive stench.

The attempts have been largely unsuccessful.

Diving right back into the pile of sludge, then, Dish is pleased to report that the Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation Media Awards took place on April 14 in Los Angeles. Longtime lesbian rights activist and out actress JENNIFER ANISTON finally got her due in the form of a GLAAD Award...oh...wait...Dish got that wrong. Aniston, who's never done anything more yonic-loving than blandly peck COURTENEY COX on the mouth in NBC's "Dirt," inexplicably was honored by the organization.

She received the Vanguard Award for her efforts to increase visibility and understanding of gays...yadda...yadda. Dish has been chained to her desk for years, never allowed to smoke or pee just so she can fulfill the insatiable gossip needs of her gay readers, and Aniston's one-upped her again! The first was in marrying BRAD PITT, natch.

Other GLAAD tidings: JOHN AMAECHI and T.R. KNIGHT both received standing ovations, but recently out NEIL PATRICK HARRIS appeared disappointed not to receive one, according to USA Today.

"Oh sure, you stand for T.R.," Harris said onstage, garnering laughs but no standing o's. Sorry Harris, get called a faggot on set or write a book, and then maybe we'll stand while applauding. It's a simple enough formula.

In the "is this lame joke still around?" category, REBECCA ROMIJN, while chatting about her "Ugly Betty" role as a transgender woman, said "You always bring a little bit of yourself to every character you play, so maybe I'm a gay guy in a woman's body."

Dish, too, dear. Good thing Becky's still got her looks.

Daring move

As a lesbian, JENNY SHIMIZU has made the risky choice of being out and thereby revoking all shots at a GLAAD award. Despite that dreadful decision, she has managed to piece together the fragments of her now-meaningless life and even landed a gig with the cast of "Dante's Cove," on gay channel Here! Television.

"We are truly excited she is joining the cast, and we hope her onscreen romance with fellow out actress, MICHELLE WOLFF, will deliver a lesbian fantasy come true," said Here! executive Meredith Kadlec in a press release.

Ooh, Dish is intrigued! Tragically, she and all of the other Sapphic sisters will have to wait until the third season debuts this October.

Gays snitch!

Gossip wouldn't be gossip without a touch of irresponsible rumor-mongering. This bit comes from self-proclaimed former publicist to the stars, Jonathan Jaxson (if there ever was a made-up spelling).

The no-doubt wholly trustworthy (and gay!) Jaxson, who isn't doing a thing wrong but selling out his former clients, claims that hot Hollywood mess LINDSAY LOHAN is in a lesbian relationship with DJ SAMANTHA RONSON.

"Maybe she was tired of the boys and that is why she decided to spice it up with BFF Samantha Ronson," Jaxson wrote on his blog, jonathanjaxson.blogspot.com.

"I would love to name all of the young Hollywood stars she has slept with, " Jaxson says, "but I will keep that for the 'book.'"

According to the blog, the tell-all book will be arriving this fall. Oh, help us all.
